

Woofs and Hoofs Animal Massage Introduces Distance Learning Course

Woofs and Hoofs Animal Massage has recently introduced the Professional Animal Massage Program to provide interested students the techniques and experience necessary to start a career as a professional animal massage therapist.

The course is offered in eleven separate modules which are available via distance learning. Each module builds from the previous one, and there is homework and quizzes that are used to check the participants understanding before they can move on to the next module.

Animal massage offers the following benefits:

- Relieves pain
- Improves the flexibility of joints
- Extends the range of motion
- Helps the functioning of the immune system
- Teaches a frightened animal to accept touching and handling.

Working with animals to help them benefit from the items above can be a very rewarding profession. The Professional Animal Massage Program provides participants interested in careers in animal health care and veterinary support a way to take their first steps forward to helping animals feel their very best.

The program starts with the introduction to animal massage and moves on to animal anatomy and physiology. In the later modules, participants will cover animal massage and stretching techniques and learn how to develop massage plans for their clients. A section on first aid is also covered, and information about business practices and ethics is provided in the final module.

All individual modules are completed via distance learning under the supervision of a professional animal massage therapist. After all eleven modules are completed, students are required to take a final exam on site at Woofs and Hoofs.
